Safe Trail and Recreational Access Map for North Stapleton Updated

Public asked to avoid unsafe construction areas and not impede work that could delay opening of new parks and open space

DENVER (September 13, 2016) – Stapleton’s master developer Forest City today issued an updated guide to safe recreational access to miles of trails and open space north of Interstate 70, while identifying those areas that are currently under development and therefore are off limits and unsafe for public access.

“Throughout Stapleton, there are more than 50 parks and nearly 40 miles of trails and wonderful open space that offer safe access for pedestrians, runners, cyclists and anyone who wants to enjoy the outdoor amenities of one of the nation’s most successful new urban communities,” said Tom Gleason, vice president-public relations for Forest City Stapleton, Inc. “As they enjoy those amenities, however, we ask them to stay out of areas that are not open to the public. The failure to observe those restrictions may jeopardize their safety and actually impede work to the degree that it could delay completion of additional parks and open space.”

About Stapleton

Located on the site of Denver’s former international airport, Stapleton is one of the largest urban redevelopments in the United States. The core objective of the community plan is to create a living example of progressive, sustainable neighborhood design. With a walkable mix of energy-efficient new homes, retail districts, schools, offices and an extensive network of parks and open spaces, Stapleton is not only leading the way environmentally but economically and socially, too. The community is being developed by Forest City Realty Trust, Inc.
